

Knoxville Exploration

Project:

We are going to use this week to investigate folding as a basic building block of the world, with the idea that all designers fold at the center of how we are working. We are going to use Knoxville as our learning laboratory, with each studio curating an exhibition for this Friday which will capture both the current conditions of your site and how you think it could evolve with your proposed folded interventions. You will be working individually on specific projects and also as a team to create a clear proposal through the combination of your projects for how you would suggest that the city of Knoxville could imagine its future.

Instructions:

With your assigned group explore Knoxville. As designers, we are constantly looking at the world around us for inspiration in our own work. Since we are investigating folding as a base principle of the world you are going to look for existing examples of folding around the city. Each of you should document as many of those examples using your phone cameras as you can find.

Additionally, you should try to get to know the current characteristics of the city and your specific site. What kind of people seem to be here? Is it primarily commercial or residential? Is the urban fabric dense or loose?

Deliverable(s):

Upload your images to the link in the SDC app.